Quilters at First Lutheran Church tell yarns and keep people overseas in stitches

By LEANNE JOSEPHSON
The Daily Astorian

Be very careful of the quilters in the basement of First Lutheran Church.

They'll lure you down with the sound of percolating coffee and promises of finger cookies and sweets. And then they'll suggest that perhaps you might be quite adept at tying yarn or tracing squares.

They're crafty (pun most certainly intended), and committed.

"We'll snag anyone," quilter Betty Jo Heiner says from behind her black Singer sewing machine.

Women have been gathering at the church for 37 years to make quilts to send to needy people around the world.

Since they started keeping records in 1993, the group has made 1,257 quilts to send to places like Bangladesh, Niger and Guinea.

Tucked tightly inside banana boxes in a back storage room, about 75 of the handmade quilts wait to be hauled to Portland in May. From there they'll be put on a truck to Seattle and transferred to a train that will take them to a Lutheran World Relief distribution center on the East Coast. Next, the quilts will travel thousands of miles to remote villages, refugee camps, hospitals and disaster sites.

The group also donates the handmade quilts locally. They gave them to families during the 1996 Clatskanie flood, and have donated soft baby blankets to the hospital.

"If a house burns or someone is in need we'll donate them here," says Venus Luukinen, who has been a First Lutheran quilter for 30 years.

Humble beginnings

But before they can tuck a child to sleep, the quilts start out here as a pile of batting, drapery scraps, bedding and leftover cloth.

Janeice Crawford and Winnie Rasmussen stand at a large table tying a quilt – a process that holds the layers together so the batting won't shift.

At another table, Joanne Baker and Luukinen are sorting squares of material into patterns. These pieces of fabric, flowers, checks, plaids and solids, will become the top portion of the quilt.

"This is the challenge," Baker says as she chooses a royal purple square. "Because this is just scrap material, sometimes they turn out really good. Sometimes you wish you had something else."

The squares and rectangles vary in size, from 21 inches down to 6 inches, of which 165 are needed for a quilt.

"We all groan and moan when we have to take those home," Heiner says. "But they're the most beautiful."

The fabrics they use are usually cotton and polyester, occasionally they use wool. Knits stretch too much so they rarely use those.

The cloth can come from coats, sheets, old slacks, shirts and unused fabric from other projects, as long as the material is in good condition. The garments are washed before they're turned into squares.

"We do need material, we're running out," Baker adds.

Until three years ago, women used to use old blankets to fill the quilts, but now they use batting, which the church purchases. The church also pays the 16-cents a pound it costs for shipping.

The finished products, which are trucked out twice a year, are beautiful in their simplicity, not intricate, but comfortable and inviting as a fire.

"It's to keep people warm, not something you put in a quilt show or sell for $300 to $400," Baker says.

Not only used for heat, the quilts are also used to haul people's worldly possessions.

"They pack their chickens and pigs around in these sometimes," Heiner says.

The quilters meet 10 a.m. to 2 p.m. the third and fourth Tuesdays of the month. Anyone who wishes to augment the regular 12-16 people who usually come is welcome – men, women, teenagers and grandkids alike. Bring a sack lunch if you come for the whole time, or just drop in for a couple hours.

"I just enjoy working with all the ladies," Heiner says of her dedication. "It makes you feel good that you're doing something for someone."
